MR: FLAGLER'S POSITION.

The result was that Mr. Flager aunounced more emphatically than ever his belief that his son-in-law, the baron, did not commit suicide, but that death was due to an over-dose of chloral hydrate. The heart of the deceased, he said was weak, he could not stand high altitudes, and because of consequent pervoyaness, resorted to of consequent nervousness, resorted to the use of hypnotics, including chloral hydrate. There was no reasonable excuse for the man's committing suicide. He was the only son of a wealthy mother living in San Francisco, he was well supplied with money, as witness the finding in his possession of $500 in in drafts and currency, and he was en route to California where his wife was waiting to receive him. The baron, Mr. Flagier told recorters who saw him, was running a coffee plantation down in the republic, but the altitude was too much for him, and he could not stay there long. He was a great schemer, but his projects were often so unpractical that his relatives could not approve of them or extend substantial sympathy. This nettled Baron Hickey, and this with his eccentricities account for the expression used in the last letter to his wife which found its way into public print. Moreover, this expression, which, by the way, has been made so much of, was but the result of a transient whim upon which so stress is to be laid at upon which so stress is to be laid at Fitch would be indicted before evenant of the result of the re eccentricities account for the expres-

all. There were no unpleasant relations between Mr. Flagler and his son-in-law.

The distinguished visitor said Mrs.
Harden Hickey was much prostrated by the sad news, and was taking it much to heart. She and her husband were on the best terms, and like himself took no stock in the suicide theosomewheres. Over a year ago, George Speck found out where one of the Fitch wives lived in San Francisco, and secured a letter from her which he showed to the writer of this article The poor woman declared therein that Fitch had deserted her, and that she was taking in washing for a living She state i that her belief then was that he would come to no good end.

People have been disposed rather to People have been disposed rather to laugh at Fitch, as he ambled and shambled along the streets like an animated washtub, and thought he was more of a goose, a pudding headed person rather than a deliberate rascal; and his grandiloquent pretentions about having been on the California and Arizons suppress heads afforded much zona supreme bench afforded much food for merriment at the old goat's expense. Fitch married his present wife shortly after settling in El Paso, and as far as can be ascertained she has been a good wife to him, and is overcome by latest developments. Much sympathy is expressed for Mr.

lowe who has been victimized before by conscienceless persons because of his good heartedness. He had been paying Fitch $12 per week up to the time he was horsewhipped by the wife of the shooting gallery man, when Fitco became so apprehensive that the racket would cost him his job that he offered to work for just his board. So Mr. Lowe reduced his compensation to $7 per week, and on that Fitch has apparently managed to live. Fitch never inspired any one with respect for him as a citizen or as a newspaper mud. If the news came his way on time, it was all right; if it came along a week after its occurrence, why, twas all right just the same. The presence of whi ewhiskers on a result of the news came his way on time, it was all right; if it came along evening twenty minutes before sunset.

But Just'ce Mc-Kie gave Mr. Lowe a good bit of advice when he told him, "Look here, Lowe, don't you pin your faith on any man merely because he goes to church."
